

How to build a norm from a speech act

How are norms, good or bad, brought into being by speech acts? Sometimes by an authoritative speaker who enacts a rule; but often more informally via a process of accommodation, to which hearers and bystanders are party. Norms are brought into being by speech acts which follow a rule of accommodation.