

Informative presupposition as back-door testimony

How do we learn from the speech acts of others? Not only from their assertions, but also from their informative presuppositions, which therefore function as back-door testimony about e.g. race and social norms (Sbisà, Stanley). Like assertion, presupposition is guided by a norm of knowledge, with implications for the responsibility of speakers and hearers.